Pedestrian stops drop, traffic stops rise

By Jeremy Gorinis Chicago Tribune

The rise in traffic stops over the last decade, now running at an all-time high, has good news and bad news. Pace says it has captured the good news in the form of a recognition award for boosting service on interstates 55 and 90.

The bad news is that it lost riders in 2018, but operators are now promising to boost service in the expanding areas.

The findings have raised alarms for civil libertarians as critics say they are attempting to improve traffic effectiveness.

The number of traffic stops more than tripled, rising from 187,133 in 2015 to 585,965 in 2017, then jumping to 1,022,527 in 2018, the ACLU said.

The latest report also found that Chicago stopped African-American motorists at a disproportionately higher rate than Whites, Hispanics and Asians.

The findings have raised alarms for civil libertarians as critics say they are attempting to improve traffic effectiveness.

The number of traffic stops more than tripled, rising from 187,133 in 2015 to 585,965 in 2017, then jumping to 1,022,527 in 2018, the ACLU said.

The latest report also found that Chicago stopped African-American motorists at a disproportionately higher rate than Whites, Hispanics and Asians.

The findings have raised alarms for civil libertarians as critics say they are attempting to improve traffic effectiveness.

The number of traffic stops more than tripled, rising from 187,133 in 2015 to 585,965 in 2017, then jumping to 1,022,527 in 2018, the ACLU said.

The latest report also found that Chicago stopped African-American motorists at a disproportionately higher rate than Whites, Hispanics and Asians.

The findings have raised alarms for civil libertarians as critics say they are attempting to improve traffic effectiveness.

The number of traffic stops more than tripled, rising from 187,133 in 2015 to 585,965 in 2017, then jumping to 1,022,527 in 2018, the ACLU said.

The latest report also found that Chicago stopped African-American motorists at a disproportionately higher rate than Whites, Hispanics and Asians.

The findings have raised alarms for civil libertarians as critics say they are attempting to improve traffic effectiveness.
Our front-page story:

WAS HER GRANDFATHER A PATRIOT OR A NAZI?

Cicely Calusinski's appeal. Her case has now been on the docket for four years.

The ACLU, which has been involved in the case, says the legal and emotional toll of the appeals process has been overwhelming for Calusinski and her family. They have been living in limbo while awaiting a decision from the Illinois Supreme Court.

Calusinski's family has endured a series of setbacks in their quest for justice. In 2018, the Illinois Supreme Court denied Calusinski's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, ending the possibility of a retrial. In 2019, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit denied Calusinski's petition for a writ of habeas corpus, finding that the Illinois Supreme Court's decision was not an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law.

Calusinski's family has continued to fight for justice, and they have not given up hope. They believe that their loved one is innocent and that he has been wrongfully convicted of murder. They have refused to give up on the possibility of a new trial, and they continue to work tirelessly to clear Calusinski's name.

Calusinski's family has received support from many people, including the ACLU, who has been a valued partner in their fight for justice. They have also received support from the community, who have rallied around them in their time of need.

Calusinski's family has faced many challenges, but they have remained strong and resilient. They have continued to fight for justice, and they have not given up hope. They believe that their loved one is innocent and that he has been wrongfully convicted of murder. They have refused to give up on the possibility of a new trial, and they continue to work tirelessly to clear Calusinski's name.

Calusinski's family has received support from many people, including the ACLU, who has been a valued partner in their fight for justice. They have also received support from the community, who have rallied around them in their time of need.