Pedophilia prohibited in Canada so far. What will tomorrow bring?

by Marius Kundrotas, politologist
Respublika, 1 April 2011

I admit I was glad to receive the position imparted by the official representative of the Canadian Government, Mr. Kevin Hamilton on the issue of sexual exploitation of children. Comprehensive information about the prevention of this iniquity in the previous laws of Canada and its international policy does foster hopes that it will not be facile for the supporters of pedophilia to succeed in their filthy aims. Nevertheless, the case of homosexuality proves that legitimization of most tendencies begins with discussions, and followed by law initiatives, it eventually develops into a corresponding political conjuncture. The member of the Canadian Parliament, Marc Lemay also did notice the existing links between the cases of homosexuality and pedophilia.

It is pleasing that the current official position of the Canadian Government is different from the that declared at the Parliament by Hubert Van Gijsegem, the so called “expert”, who referred to pedophilia as “a sexual orientation”, having compared it not only with “homosexuality”, but also with natural sexuality which is today associated with the notion of “heterosexuality”. Taking into consideration the information announced in public, one is under the impression that this position has already gained supporters at the Parliament, and this is in fact worrying. So, this is what the article “Kanada iteisina pedofilija?” published in the Respublika has been aiming to draw attention to.

The article is based on the material provided in three different sources. In English, it was the article “Pedophilia a’ sexual orientation’ experts tell Parliament” from the Life Site News. The Russian source was the In Victory; title of the article: “В Канаде педофилию признали сексуальной ориентацией” (“Pedophilia has been recognized as a sexual orientation in Canada”). In Lithuanian, the Formalios naujienos has published an article “Kanada – pedofiliją pripažino... seksualine orientacija” (“Canada has recognized pedophilia... as a sexual orientation”).

The statement “pedophilia has been recognized as a sexual orientation at the Parliament of Canada”, assigned to the author of the article published in the Respublika, is not an invention of the author of this article. This is the conveyance of information gathered from the above mentioned sources. It should be highlighted that this statement implies: pedophilia has been recognized as an “orientation” at the Parliament, not by the Parliament. And Mr. Hamilton himself confirmed this fact that such position had been voiced at the Parliament.

This article in general conveys the information from other sources. The author’s input is nothing else, but a short discourse into general trends, including the story about the pedophiles’ party in the Netherlands, also showing separate interest in the political power represented by the brave Canadian parliamentarian Mr. Lemay. It should be noted that the articles published in two of the three provided sources feature titles formulated in a much more assertive manner – in the form of statements. Meanwhile, the title of the article published in the Respublika has been consciously formulated as a question, taking into consideration the possibility that some of the primary sources might provide information which has gaps in it or is one-sided.

For maximum objectivism, it would be very much to the purpose if Mr. Hamilton or other representative of Canadian Government could purvey to the readers of Respublika and to the entire Lithuanian society, more explicit, more comprehensive, more accurate information about the discussion at the Parliament that was described in the previous article. The laws of the Republic of Lithuania commit the mass media to present accurate news and different opinions. I am assured that the Respublika is observing both these missions in an exemplary pattern. The response of the current representative of the Canadian Government made it clear that pedophilia in this country has not been legitimized so far. Nevertheless, the provided information manifests that the aspirations to equate this abnormality to normal sexuality have already reached the supreme governmental institutions, thus there is a serious fight starting. And this fight will demand cohesion of all nations – for protecting the human being, the families, and the children.
